

Leidos Awards $10,000 in Prizes in “Emerging & Disruptive Technologies” Essay Contest

June 13, 2016

(Reston, Va.) June 13, 2016 – Leidos, a national security, health and infrastructure solutions company, recently recognized the winners of its inaugural “Emerging and Disruptive Technologies” essay contest, held in collaboration with the U.S. Naval Institute. On hand to present awards and congratulations were Executive Vice President Mike Leiter, Senior Vice President Mike Chagnon, and Navy Strategic Account Executive Nevin Carr. The presentation took place at the Sea Air Space Symposium near Washington, DC, during a lunch attended by about 2,000 supporters.

The winners were: First Prize ($5,000) - Sean Cate and Jesse Sloman; Second Prize ($2,500) - CDR Timothy McGeehan, USN, and CDR Douglas Wahl, USN(Ret); and Third Prize ($1,500) - LTJG Michael Haydell, USN. In addition to their cash awards, each winner was given a plaque. The first place essay “Operating Under Constant Surveillance” was also published in the May edition of U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings magazine and can be viewed at <http://www.usni.org/magazines/proceedings/2016-05/operating-under-constant-surveillance>.
