Leidos awarded $390 million NSA signals intelligence contract

April 3, 2025

RESTON, Va., April 3, 2025 /PRNewswire/ -- Leidos (NYSE:LDOS) today announced a new contract to provide signals intelligence (SIGINT) capabilities, engineering, analysis and reporting tools to the National Security Agency (NSA). The base year plus four option years single-award contract has a ceiling value of $390 million.

Leidos will perform a wide range of technical, engineering, systems administration and management functions. Tasks include delivery of SIGINT capabilities, analysis and reporting tool modifications, engineering services, lab and testbed management, integration and testing, deployment, training, and sustainment of a subset of NSA systems.

"Tailored and unique SIGINT solutions for the military and intelligence community are critical to delivering information superiority at speed," said Roy Stevens, Leidos National Security Sector president. "This contract will leverage Leidos' engineering and technical expertise, as we expand our work with the NSA."

Leidos combines expertise in cyber and IT managed services, as well as radar, sensors and other technologies, to develop SIGINT technologies, with end-users always in mind. Those technologies include resilient communications that operate through interruption to keep critical mission data flowing.
