Leidos to help strengthen global IT operations for the U.S. Department of State under Evolve contract

May 21, 2026

Company selected in four categories to deliver secure, reliable IT supporting U.S. diplomacy globally

RESTON, Va., May 21, 2026 /PRNewswire/ -- Leidos (NYSE:LDOS) is set to help modernize IT systems U.S. diplomats rely on worldwide through four awards under the U.S. Department of State's Evolve contract.

Through Evolve, Leidos is ready to support secure access to critical systems and data across the State Department's global network. This includes strengthening cybersecurity, modernizing applications and infrastructure and improving the reliability of IT services across a network of embassies and consulates.

"The Department of State runs one of the most globally dispersed IT environments in the federal government," said Leidos Digital Modernization President Steve Hull. "Diplomats and embassy staff depend on secure, resilient systems that perform in any environment. These awards position us to deliver technology that supports their mission every day."

Leidos received awards in four functional categories: cloud and data center services; application development services; network and telecommunications services; and customer and end user support.

Evolve is a multiple award, indefinite delivery indefinite quantity contract that includes a one-year base period and six option years, with a total ceiling of $10 billion.

Leidos brings extensive experience in cloud migration, zero trust security, AI-driven operations and global network modernization. By using automation and continuous monitoring, the company helps agencies advance cyber defenses, improve information sharing and maintain reliable operations worldwide.

This award supports Leidos' NorthStar 2030 strategic focus on digital modernization, cyber and customer-centric innovation leveraging AI and IT transformation.
