

Leidos continues to strengthen U.S. Navy's secure intelligence operations

August 3, 2026

RESTON, Va., Aug. 3, 2026 /PRNewswire/ -- Leidos (NYSE: LDOS) will continue modernizing the infrastructure underpinning secure naval intelligence systems worldwide through a recent contract worth up to $64.8 million from the Office of Naval Intelligence.

The agreement, which is for a base year with four option years, advances work Leidos has performed since 2021 and will help improve operational reliability, secure information sharing and accelerate technology integration for the Hopper Global Communications Center (GCC).

"Modern intelligence operations depend on digital infrastructure that performs securely and reliably across the globe," said Chad Haferbier, senior vice president of Decision Advantage at Leidos. "We are helping the Office of Naval Intelligence modernize that foundation so trusted information reaches warfighters faster."

The Hopper GCC provides IT services that rapidly disseminate intelligence to decision makers in the Navy and across the Department of War. Its systems manage some of the military's most highly controlled information.

This work advances Leidos' NorthStar 2030 strategy by strengthening two of the company's core growth pillars, cyber and mission & digital solutions, while delivering secure, resilient capabilities in support of national security.
